TRANSLANTIC PACKAGE EXPRESS AND GENERAL EUROPEAN AGENCY.—The undersigned give notice that they have completed their arrangements in this country and in Europe for facilitating the TRANSMISSION of MERCHANDISE, of every description, in large or small Parcels, (including sample packages,) between the VARIOUS EXPRESS OFFICES IN THE U. S. STATES, and PRESS OFFICES IN THE U. S. STATES, and all parts of Great Britain, France and other places on the Continent.

One of the members of the house has recently returned from England, where he has made a permanent arrangement with the eminent forwarding establishment of Messrs. CHAPLIN & HORNE, who will receive all goods for distribution in Europe, and promptly deliver them at their many agencies. Our connexion with this extensive house gives us facilities heretofore enjoyed by no other parties.

CHAPLIN & HORNE being also the exclusive Agents in England for the Messageries Nationales of France, we have peculiar advantages for forwarding parcels through to France and other parts of the Continent.

Our house at London and Liverpool will attend to the collection of accounts, and other business of a confidential nature, in any part of the kingdom, and with the assistance of several legal friends, will give special attention to all documents requiring attention, or other action.

We have authority to draw on the PROVINCIAL BANK OF IRELAND, and all its branches, and are prepared to furnish drafts for the convenience of our customers.

On the reception of goods or parcels in this country, they will be forwarded without delay to their destinations—those out of the city by the earliest Expresses.

Persons in a distance desiring to make shipments to England or the Continent, either by steamer or packet-ships, can leave their goods, or in orders, at any of the offices of ADAMS & CO., and GREENE & CO., in the United States, who will receive all goods for distribution in Europe, and promptly deliver them at their many agencies.

THE WHITE SPRAY,
OR THE
PEDLAR OF NEWPORT.
BY SYBIL CONYERS.
C H A P T E R I.

The carriages were bearing away one by one light-hearted girls from the old school at Oakland, and long Kate Ellis awaited the coming of Sybil, whose hat and shawl lay by the trunk ready to be carried below; after awhile she went down to the garden, searching each arbor and nook, where they were wont to loiter, but no Sybil was there; when over Kate came the memory of an old haunt in the woods at some distance, skirting the seminary grounds; it was a cluster of trees through which ran a small stream, and there on a moss-covered rock they had laughed away many a summer hour; and there that night Kate found a slight figure, kneeling reverently upon the green turf, with tightly folded hands.

"I cannot see," said a low voice! "I cannot see the flowers, whose sweet breath, but mocks my darkened vision. I may not look upon the bright stars, or the glorious things of earth, but, I will strive, oh Father, never more to murmur. And the loved faces which I may never more behold, though all other sorrows pale before this, so hard to bear, even for strength, with thy help, will I strive."

"Sybil, Sybil?" whispered Kate, "can I do nothing for you?"

"Darling," she answered softly, "I pray for me, pray for the blind girl. Stand out in the light, I would look upon you, for to-morrow's sun, bright as it may shine, will be too dark for me!"

Alas, even as she spoke, the full light of the setting sun was falling upon me; but Sybil, Sybil Conyers, was blind.

CHAPTER II.

"How trifles sometimes haunt us all our life," said the sweet sad voice of Sybil Conyers, as one summer evening she sat by the side of Kate Ellis, in the pleasant little parlor of old Mrs. Conyers, in the country, where Sybil now spent much of her time; more than a year had passed since her departure from Oakley's, and Mrs. Conyers was hopelessly blind. She could not bear to dwell in the crowded city, where all of life was closed to her; but in the country still she might listen to the wild bird's song though she could not mark it plume its wing for heaven; still the fragrant air was her own, although the bright flowers and fair things of earth were hid. A change had come over her, not only in spirit but in form; she was taller, slimmer, than of old; her cheek paler, but her smile sweeter, and the white lids drooped over her eyes, whose brightness mocked the down upon them. No longer she sat erect, as of old, but day and night (for it was all one now to her,) found her bowed above her desk, pen in hand, groping her way slowly over her paper. If fate had closed one fountain of light it had opened another, and forth gushed the wild waters of feeling. Poetry and passion were born of the darkness.—Sybil Conyers was delighting the world with poem after poem, of rare beauty; and fast as the blind girl wrote, Kate Ellis, her amanuensis, sent forth those new songs of feeling; and none knew that the unknown poetess, the inspired one, was a sad-heated, blind girl, weeping those fair thoughts in the solitude of the country. That quiet country home was the very place for one stricken like Sybil, and a holy calm had now settled upon her, crushing out all rebellious thoughts.

That night she was speaking of the past, a thing of rare occurrence, for that past afforded too painful a contrast to the present. How trifles will haunt us.

"Did I ever tell you, Kate, of one who I met when a child at Newport," she asked.

"Never, love; I did not even know that you were ever there."

"Yes; it was late in the summer of 18—; we arrived on the eight of the great ball. Mother was too ill to do ought but lie quiet upon a sofa, and I went below with some ladies to the drawing room. I remember but little what passed there. I only know that my head ached with the confusion, and that I strolled out upon the balcony to breathe the fresh air, and there I found one who I then supposed to be a genuine pedlar, but have since concluded was but one of the characters of the night.

The Daily News.

NEWPORT,
BY CHANSTON & NORMAN,
127 THAMES STREET.

MONDAY MORNING, MAY 6, 1851.

II.—The sudden disappearance—full unaccounted for—of so highly respectable a gentleman as Mr. Edward Moore, late of this town, is in itself a remarkable fact.—But it is not so remarkable as that so strange an occurrence in broad daylight, in the most populous of our cities, should have, beyond the immediate circle of the gentleman's friends, excited but little if any interest. Advertisements are universally disseminated, not only through the public prints, but by means of handbills; a considerable reward is offered; the dominant position of the police, their vigilance, is aroused, and yet we hear of few efforts being made for the recovery of the lost and missing, beyond those instigated by certain benevolent or interested individuals.

How singular! Can it be possible that any man is suffered to vanish, as it were, from the earth without at least awakening the public curiosity or sympathy? It would seem so. Beyond a paragraph generally copied, announcing the disappearance, we have noted no remarks or comments on Mr. Moore's exit; it has almost been passed over, so far as the press is concerned, sub silentio. And what deduction is to be drawn from this? Is it that the community of a great metropolis are indifferent to the sudden extinction of a human life by violence or accident? No; notwithstanding the small value which is set in New York on persons compared with that, with which property is regarded, such is not the reason for a lack of interest in this case. It is because no one of Newport, except those who knew and esteemed Mr. Moore, believed that his disappearance was attributable to his death. To suppose that an inoffensive and quiet gentleman of dignified deportment and courteous address could be murdered without cause, is too gross an absurdity. He neither had nor was suspected to have money. To suppose that he was accidentally killed, by a fall, for example, into the water in open day anywhere about the city, is an hypothesis of equal absurdity. It is at least to the minds of indifferent observers, for it is next to impossible that he could have so fallen without either being noticed at the time or being discovered afterwards.

What then is the common and vulgar belief? That Mr. Moore voluntarily went away. To us, who knew his character, such a supposition is even more absurd than any conjecture, that could be hazarded. A person he was, eminent for veracity, for strict probity, for honor, for delicacy, as well as for great learning and the thorough breeding of a gentleman. Besides life lay before him like a bright and cheeful landscape, or, to use the ordinary phrase, his prospects were excellent. Good fortune is not a thing to be run away from.

Where then is Mr. Moore? Killed!—We think not. Dead by his own act or by accident! We think not. Gone away voluntarily! No, we are sure not. Will he be discovered? Will he return?—These are questions we cannot answer.

What then is our conjecture? We have no conjecture; we can form none. We know not what to believe, though we know what not to believe. It is a profound and curious mystery—one, which may never be solved; but which is more wonderful than any to be found in the pages of fiction. One marvel is that it has excited so little interest abroad. We can account for the lack of interest, only in the way we have mentioned. But we suggest to our contemporaries, especially of the New York press, that this affair should not be suffered to die out; but that, for the strangeness of the occurrence, if for no higher reason, the fact should be reiterated, that, almost at random, a person of age, sense and discretion vanished or left the teem of the earth, leaving no trace behind.

NEW AND HANDSOME BOOKS.—To our citizens, visiting New York, we would recommend to them as a most agreeable resort, the handsome and well-furnished book establishment of G. P. Putnam, 155 Broadway.

We know of no pleasant a place at which books can be bought at more reasonable prices. Mr. Putnam's own publications, always brought out in the most correct, neat and indeed elegant manner, are worthy of a place in each well-selected library; and he deserves a compliment, that can be paid to few publishers, of never issuing a work, which is not richly worth reading.

II.—The steamer Argo makes an excursion to this place, to-morrow, from Warren, Bristol and East Greenwich; she will arrive here about ten o'clock.

II.—The Massachusetts Legislature adjourned on Friday, after a session of 122 days.

II.—We have been compelled to place our carriage upon the route, and should they fail to supply any of our subscribers, for a day or two, until they become familiar with the routes, we will thank such patrons to give notice at the office.

II.—At a sleighing party, as the upturned tips of a young lady were prepared to meet those of the virgin of her heart, "a snowflake fell upon them, and was instantly dissolved. 'I will take warning,' said the heart, 'and not tempt my fate.'

II.—Tomorrow is election day, and since it is being an important political minority, it is an anxious looked-for day on the part of children. It is the opening of the season, the time when winter and its appendages are thrown off as fetters, and when all the little folks appear in their new attire, and enjoy the vivacity of the occasion; for their sake we are always glad to have pleasant weather on the occasion.

II.—Gov. Anthony will probably arrive in the steamer Perry, this evening; his usual salute will be fired as the boat passes through the harbor.

II.—As usual, there will probably be any quantity of pickpockets and thieves in town tomorrow; persons must be careful of their pocketbooks as they pass through the crowd, and housekeepers should have their premises secured.

II.—The General Assembly will meet tomorrow, at 11 o'clock, and proceed immediately in the organization of the Government.

II.—We scarcely open a paper now that we do not read notices of mysterious rappings, in all parts of the country; we are daily expecting to hear of some of these spiritual visitations about Newport. It certainly will not do for us to be so far behind the age in these fashionable accomplishments.

II.—Among the arrivals at the Bellevue House we notice J. Prescott Hall, Esq., and H. Allen Wright, Esq., and family, of New York.

II.—These popular musicians, the Germanians, are giving a series of Concerts in Providence.

II.—On Saturday last Mr. Perry C. Irish slaughtered a noble ox weighing 1900 pounds; it was raised on this Island. It is for sale at Irish's, next south of the Brick Market; it is noble looking beef.

II.—Miss Charlotte Cushman is playing at the Adelphi in Washington.

II.—The fidelity of the dog is wonderful. A small dog, the property of a gentleman in Albany, on the death of a child it had been used to romp with, whined and pined away, refusing to be nourished until death ensued.

II.—It is estimated on the principle of past increase, as determined by the census, with the addition of statistics of emigration, that the population of the United States in 1851 will reach 25,000,000.

II.—It is hinted that Fanny Kemble's new play is not original—but translated from Alex. Dumas' play of "Mademoiselle de Belle Isle."

CONGREGATIONAL.—A man who was prosecuted for beating his wife declared that he loved her dearly—better than anything except "rum!"

II.—A coffin full of first class Havanas Seers was lately smuggled into Plymouth, England, being passed by the Customs officer without examination, those bearing it having required the way to a certain burying ground.

II.—A friend writing from the "Diggings" in California, says that for several days he counted the number of shovels full of earth he dug out, and found by the quantity of gold dust obtained, that each shovel full yielded on an average 12 1/2 cents.

II.—Among the passengers by the Cambria, are Count Bidisco, the Russian Minister and Mr. J. Bulloch, the aseemingly Cashier of the Central Railroad and Banking Co. of Saratoga, whose desolations amount to some $100,000.

II.—Mr. Colburn's remains are in a vault of the Western Cemetery, Charleston, with the flag of the State flying over them.—The three sons of Mr. Colburn have written a letter to Gov. Seabrook, in which they say that after consulting with their mother, they have concluded to allow the State authorities full possession of all that remains on earth of their beloved parent.

FEW FEW.—Female loveliness cannot be clothed in a more pleasing garb than that of purity. A female thus arrayed, is one of the most interesting objects. Every eye rests upon her with pleasure; the learned and the wise, the young and the aged, of the opposite sex delight in her society, and regard her with respect and veneration. Ignorance and folly stand reproved in her presence; and vice, in its bold career, shrinks abashed at her gaze.—A female thus arrayed, thus equipped, is prepared to encounter every trial which this uncertain state may bring; to rise with proper elevation to the pinnacle of fortune or sink with becoming fortitude, into the abyss of poverty.

II.—At a sleighing party, as the upturned tips of a young lady were prepared to meet those of the virgin of her heart, "a snowflake fell upon them, and was instantly dissolved. 'I will take warning,' said the heart, 'and not tempt my fate.'

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Washington arrived at New York Saturday morning, in 13 days from Bremen. She brings London papers to the 20th of April.

The Catastrophe at Angers.—The following details of the catastrophe, are given in the Journal de Maine et Loire of the 10th:

A悲惨的事件 has just occurred here. At 11 o'clock this morning, a squadron of Hussars, coming from Nantes, had crossed over the suspension bridge of the Basque Maine, without any accident, although the wind blew very heavily from the West and the river was much agitated. The last of the horses had scarcely crossed the bridge, when the head of the column of the 3d battalion of the 11th light infantry appeared on the other side.

A joyful event has just occurred here. At 11 o'clock this morning, a squadron of Hussars, coming from Nantes, had crossed over the suspension bridge of the Basque Maine, without any accident, although the wind blew very heavily from the West and the river was much agitated. The last of the horses had scarcely crossed the bridge, when the head of the column of the 3d battalion of the 11th light infantry appeared on the other side.

Reiterated warnings were given to the troops to break into sections, as is usually done, but the rain falling heavily at the time the warning was disregarded, and the battalion advanced in close column. The head of the battalion had reached the opposite side—the pioneers, the drummers, and a part of the band were off the bridge, when the east end columns of the right bank suddenly gave way, crushing beneath them the rear of the 4th company, which, with the flank company, had not entered on the bridge. To describe the frightful spectacle is impossible; the scene at the bridge of Bressana can alone give an idea of it.

The whole town rushed to the spot to give assistance. In spite of the storm which was raging, all the boats that could be got at were launched to pick up the soldiers in the river, and a great number who were clinging to the parapets of the bridge, or who were kept afloat by their knapsacks, were immediately got out.

The number deficient amounts to 210, to which must be added 33 dead, and 30 wounded in the hospital, making the total loss to the battalion 282. There is reason, however, to hope that there may be yet some in private houses who may not be included in the number of those whose fate has been known.

N.—Since this morning, 70 bodies have been picked up, among whom are a captain, a lieutenant and two sub-lieutenants.

II.—The number of bodies picked up to this time amounts to 123. It appears that some people belonging to the town were walking on the bridge at the time of the accident, for among the bodies found are those of a servant and two children. The bodies of two of the employes of the electric have been found.

INDIA.

The 58th regiment Bengal native infantry having mutinied, Sir Charles Napier has disbanded the regiment, given their colors to another, and taken from men and officers alike arms, accoutrements, and stores.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE VICE.—The National Intelligencer emphatically contradicts the report that the President will veto any bill for the admission of California which may also include the establishment of territorial governments in Utah and New Mexico. The Intelligencer says:

The President has never assumed any such ground. One of the greatest complaints now made against him by his opponents is, that he declines to interfere with or attempts to control the legislation of Congress. He has performed his constitutional duty, and fully recommended, in regard to the newly acquired territory, such measures as in his judgement are best calculated to promote harmony and good feeling, by avoiding the unnecessary discussion of the agitating questions of the day. He has not attempted by any other means to influence or control the opinion of Congress in reference to this vexed question; nor have any of his Cabinet Ministers. The President having performed his whole duty in this particular, leaves the decision of the subject to the wisdom and patriotism of that enlightened body, whose constitutional duty it is to assist him in the administration of the Government, and to whom he looks with confidence for a satisfactory adjustment of the whole matter.

Amidst the storm of political and party strife he bears with him the consciousness of rectitude, which he knows will carry him triumphantly through all dangers, and a fitness of purpose upon which good men may confidently rely for the safety of the Republic, under any possible emergency.

CARRYING DEADLY WEAPONS.—The Philadelphia papers are highly excited upon the Legislature, to pass a brief but comprehensive act in relation to the criminal and cowardly practice of carrying deadly weapons, so signally exemplified in almost every breach of the peace occurring lately in that city among the fire rowdies and others.—

The Ledger desires that it be made a penitentiary offence for any one convicted of carrying deadly-weapons upon his person, or using them in a row. In a city, properly governed there should be no need of personal protection outside of that the law affords. There never is thought to be any necessity for carrying arms among citizens who properly appreciate their rights and duties. It is only among degraded persons, dispersed to commit outrages provoking to violent retaliation, that this vile practice, so often leading to murder, is adopted.

II.—ELECTION—NEWPORT.

The Senator PERRY, Capt. G.

THE REMARKABLE SATIVE POWERS OF
SARSAPARILLA.

I have induced numerous attempts to manufacture it, and make fondly expect that Dr. Townsend's Extract of Sarsaparilla will be the best and most efficacious medicine ever invented, and any individuals who may now wish to get up advertising look it up. As to the most effectual articles that have been made so far by Dr. Townsend's name to create confidence in the public mind in reference to the Alsatian Article we publish below.
